UK sanctions Abramovich

■ Chelsea boss one of seven oligarchs targeted with asset freezes and travel bans

Chelsea FC owner Roman Abramovich has been sanctioned by the UK government as part of its response to Russia's invasion of Ukraine.

He is one of seven oligarchs to be hit with fresh sanctions, including asset freezes and travel bans.

Chelsea FC cannot sell any more tickets for games, its merchandise shop will be closed, and it will be unable to buy or sell players on the transfer market.

The government said it would issue a special licence that allows fixtures to be fulfilled, staff to be paid and existing ticket holders to attend matches.

Secretary Defence Ben Wallace said urgent supplies being rushed from the UK could also include missiles to target Russian jets. He told MPs that President Ukrainian Volodymyr Zelensky's people "are fighting for their very survival." He added: "His country is united against the aggression – and it is indeed his country's darkest hour."

Referring to Moscow despot Vladimir Putin, Mr Wallace said: "If he wants to further his case as a great leader, he's now contained in a cage of his own making."

He added: "As the conflict intensifies, the Russians changing their tactics and so the Ukrainians need to too. pressure Ministers have come under pressure sanction Abramovich, who said he had made the "difficult decision" to sell Chelsea FC earlier this month.

The football club is among the assets frozen as part of the sanctions against Mr Abramovich and its sale has now been stalled.

But the understands the government would consider allowing Mr Abramovich to apply for a special licence to sell the club, providing he can prove he would not benefit from the sale.

Mr Abramovich, 55, is alleged to have strong ties to Russian President Vladimir Putin, which he has denied.

The government says Mr Abramovich, who has an estimated net worth of £9.4bn, is "one of the few oligarchs from the 1990s to maintain prominence under Putin".

Mr Abramovich has stakes in steel giant Evraz and Norilsk Nickel. He sold a 73% stake in Russian oil firm Sibneft to state-owned gas titan Gazprom for £9.87bn in 2005.

He is believed to own a number of properties in the UK, including a 15-bedroom mansion at Kensington Palace Gardens in west London, reportedly valued at more than £150m.

While the sanctions against him throw Chelsea's future in doubt. ministers sought to reassure the club it would not be "unnecessarily harmed".

In a tweet, Culture Secretary Nadine Dorries said holding those who have "enabled the Putin regime to account" was the priority.

"I know this brings some uncertainty, but the government will work with the league and clubs to keep football being played while ensuring sanctions hit those intended," she wrote.

When asked if being unable to sell tickets and merchandise would hit Chelsea's finances, the culture secretary said: "Sanctions have consequences and that's a fact."

Theclub'sshirtsponsor, telecommunicationscompany Three, said it had put its £40m shirt deal under review.

Chelsea has enjoyed major success since Mr Abramovich bought the club in 2003 for £140m, winning major titles including the Champions League, the Premier League and the FA Cup.

Mr Abramovich has previously said that proceeds of the club's sale would be donated to victims of war.

On Wednesday, there were 20 credible interested parties looking at a potential takeover, Chelsea including British businessman Nick Candy.

Charles in tears at Kyiv pair's plight

Prince Charles moved to tears this week as he spoke to two Ukrainians at a shelter for refugees in London.

The heir to the throne met Kyiv residents Andriy Kopylash and his daughter Veronika during a visit to a church initiative, set up to help Afghan asylum seekers.

Pastor Andriy, 55, was on a sabbatical in the UK when war broke out in Ukraine. Veronika, 23, took the last flight out of Kyiv to Italy, the day before the invasion.

They have family trapped in war-torn Ukraine.

Speaking about his chat with Charles, Andriy said: "He was very open and there were tears in his eyes. I was really impressed by him.

"It was very nice to meet Prince Charles. He was really open and was really informed about the situation. He said he had begun plans to do more to help.

"He said the situation was terrible described it as crazy and madness."

Veronika, a translator, added: "Prince Charles was very open. He was wanting to hear what the real situation was. He said they are praying and thinking about us."

Prince Charles was at a midweek shelter run by Holy Trinity Brompton at St Luke's Church in Earl's Court. Its Refugee Response programme was launched

September last following the arrival of hundreds of Afghan refugees to the area.

Charles met people involved in activities including a community café, children's face painting and a women's programme.

"The added: He Government decided to explore the donation of Starstreak high-velocity manned portable anti-air missiles.

"We shall also be increasing the supplies of rations, medical equipment and other non-lethal military aid."

It follows evidence the Russian invasion is increasingly bogged down. One Western official said: "They are tightening their grip in some areas, but there's been minimal progress for the last 24 hours."

Mr Wallace said the estimated number of Ukrainian civilians killed or injured is more than 1,000. But he added: "The true figure is expected to be much higher and I'm afraid worse is likely to come.

"So the UK will increase its funding for Ukraine £220million, which includes £120million of humanitarian aid."

Western allies needed to stand up to Putin's bullying, Mr Wallace said. He told MPs: "As long as we stand united, both as a House and as the international community, then the Kremlin's threats cannot hurt us.

"I know many of our constituents and our colleagues are fearful of what happens next. Putin and the Kremlin continue to threaten countries who offer help to Ukraine. Their military campaign will, I'm afraid, get more brutal and more indiscriminate. But it is my firm belief that our strength to stand up to such bullying comes from our alliances.

"We should strength the from peoples across Europe who are standing shoulder to shoulder to protect our values, our freedom, our tolerance, our democracy and our free press. That is our shield."

Fourteen nations have sent arms. They include Sweden and Finland which both have a long history of neutrality who sent anti-armour Germany has sent around 1,000 anti-tank weapons and 500 USmade Stinger missiles.

Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania have also delivered Stingers and Javelin missiles.

British soldiers were also warned not to join the battle - after a Coldstream Guard, 19, fled his Windsor post to fight the Russians. He wrote to his parents before booking a oneway ticket to Poland with an intention to cross the border into Ukraine.

Friends claim he has since posted a picture of his boots, indicating he may have already joined defending forces. But defence chiefs are still trying to intercept him, and three others, amid fears Russia could claim Britain has entered the war if UK troops are caught.

Libel Law reform coming to rein-in oligarchs

MINISTERS are to overhaul libel laws to stop Russian oligarchs using the courts to muzzle journalists exposing links with Putin's regime.

Dominic Raab, the Justice Secretary and Deputy Prime Minister, this week confirmed work was under way on the plan. He spoke following a crossparty move by Labour MP Liam Byrne and Conservative MP David Davis who are poised to table an amendment to the Economic Crime Bill. It would give courts the power to strike out socalled Slapps – strategic lawsuits against public participation – which have been used to stifle critics.

Mr Raab said: "I've already made clear we're going to reform

BoJo: we MUST wean the West off Russian gas

Boris Johnson has promised that Britain will play a leading role in luring the West off Russian gas.

The Prime Minister said sanctions are working but the only way to put "real lasting pressure" on Vladimir Putin is by turning to alternative energy supplies.

He said there are huge reserves around the world that mean "we do not have to be beholden to Putin in the way we are".

He added that the UK wants to bring together nations to find other gas

During a half an hour question and answer session in the Downing Street study, used by Margaret Thatcher as her main office, he gave an update on the war in Ukraine and how Britain was responding.

He said sanctions were having a bigger impact than hoped for and that the UK continues to supply weapons to Ukraine.

Mr Johnson indicated that he was disappointed that Pakistan, India and China abstained in a vote condemning Russia at the United Nations last week.

But he said the "opinion of the world is clear" on the invasion after 141 of the assembly's 193 members passed the motion in a rare emergency session called by the UN Security Council.

The PM was also quizzed about the allegations of lockdown rule-breaking that are still hanging over Downing Street as the Metropolitan Police investigation continues.

Mr Johnson said the allegations had been difficult to handle because they came out in "endless dribs and drabs" and there were lots of things he was "completely unaware" of.

107 years on: Shackleton's ship is found 10,000ft down

THE wreckage of Sir Ernest Shackleton's doomed ship Endurance has been found frozen in time – 107 years after it sank.

Thanks to the preservative powers of the icy Antarctic waters, the boat is still in almost perfect condition in its final resting place nearly 10,000ft below the waves.

And the man who directed the exploration to find and film the boat says it is "by far the finest wooden shipwreck" he has seen.

'brilliant state'

Maritime archaeologist Mensun Bound said: "We are overwhelmed by our good fortune in having located and captured images of Endurance.

"It is upright, well proud of the seabed, intact and in a brilliant state of preservation.

You can even see 'Endurance' arced across the stern, directly below the taffrail" – the handrail around the rear deck.

He added: "This is a milestone in polar history."

Anglo-Irish explorer Shackleton set out in Endurance from Plymouth in August 1914, on a quest to make the first land crossing of Antarctica. But although all 28 crew survived, their mission was sunk when, after months trapped in the ice, the three-masted schooner went under in November 1915.

The ship's captain and navigator Frank Worsley tried to plot its position, using only the sun, the stars and a sextant. And his calculations proved incredibly accurate.

The Endurance was found in the Weddell Sea near Antarctica, just four miles from where Worsley said it would be.

Endurance – a protected Historic Site and Monument – was discovered 9,869ft down on the seabed by the Endurance22 expedition – a team of scientists and historians on icebreaker S.A. Agulhas II.

They set off from Cape Town, South Africa, in February, a month after the 100th anniversary of Sir Ernest's death. The Endurance was found on Saturday – exactly 100 years to the day that the explorer was buried in South Georgia.

TV historian Dan Snow was part of the expedition, funded by the Falklands Maritime Heritage Trust. The team used non-intrusive underwater search robots to find the ship and have vowed nothing will be touched or disturbed.

Expedition leader

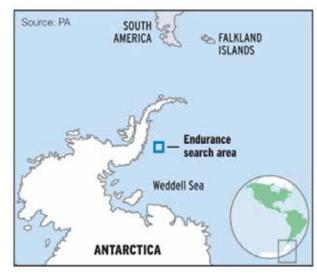

ENDURANCE: the historical ship's wheel and taffrail are clearly visible in this remarkable image from 10,000 feet under the Weddell Sea

Dr John Shears said it was "the world's most challenging shipwreck search". But the amazing find is almost eclipsed by the ship's remarkable condition.

The underwater footage shows even some of the paintwork is still gleaming – and that is down to the absence of tiny sea creatures.

Dr Adrian Glover, a biologist at the Natural History Museum, said: "The preservation of Endurance is quite remarkable, but not totally unexpected. Tiny shipworms – small bivalve molluscs – that normally eat wood in well oxygenated oceans are absent from Antarctica. So the findings are important, not just from a historical perspective but also in terms of understanding the ecology and evolution of life in Antarctica. "It's a great day for Antarctic archaeology and science."

A documentary about the Endurance22 expedition will air later this year on Disney+

'Marshall Plan' to revive Ukraine

BORIS Johnson has promised the West will have a "Marshall Plan" to rebuild Ukraine after the devastation left by Russia.

Following talks with Eastern European leaders on Monday, the Prime Minister raised the prospect of a multibillion pound project.

He insisted Putin had "gravely miscalculated" by invading, after he met his counterparts from Poland, Hungary, Slovakia and Czech Republic at a minisummit in Whitehall, London.

Mr Johnson said they agreed that when "a free, sovereign, independent Ukraine is protected and restored we will have a Marshall Plan to rebuild [it]".

Jk Rowling mocks Labour MP for failure to define what makes a woman

JK Rowling has mocked a Labour frontbencher for appearing unable to explain her party's definition of what a woman is.

Shadow women and equalities secretary Anneliese Dodds (above right) repeatedly failed to answer the question on Woman's Hour on BBC Radio 4 at the weekend.

Several listeners raised the issue in response to Labour Party plans to change the law so that trans people can selfidentify their gender.

Ms Rowling, (above, left) an opponent of the proposal, wrote on Twitter afterwards: "Someone please send the Shadow Minister for Equalities a dictionary and a backbone."

The Harry Potter author and Labour Party supporter has been an outspoken campaigner for protecting womenonly spaces such as refuges.

During a discussion to mark International Women's Day, Woman's Hour host Emma Barnett asked Ms Dodds to set out "Labour's definition of a woman". Ms Dodds replied: "I have to say there are different definitions legally around what a woman actually is.

"You look at the definition within the Equality Act and I think it just says someone who is adult and female but then it doesn't say how you would define either of those things.

"You have got the biological definition, legal definition..."

Ms Barnett said: "With respect, I didn't ask for that. What's the Labour definition?"

Ms Dodds replied: "With respect Emma, I think it does depend what the context is, surely? I mean surely that is important here.

"There are people who have decided that they have to make that transition... Understandably because they live as a woman, they want to be defined as a woman; that's what the Gender Recognition Act has brought into place."

Ms Barnett interjected: "Context is all, but trans women are women from your perspective, is that right?

"I am just trying to clarify because the Government has been very clear, it is not going ahead in England with the process of selfidentification.

"That is why I am asking you."

Ms Dodds is not the first senior Labour figure to have been involved in awkward exchanges over the issue.

Last autumn, when quizzed on BBC One's Andrew Marr show, leader Sir Keir Starmer claimed it was "not right" to say that only a woman can have a cervix.

John Bercow 'a serial bully and liar' who regularly intimidated staff

John Bercow was a serial bully and liar who intimidated staff, created a hostile workplace and abused his power, an investigation has found.

His behaviour when he was Commons Speaker was so bad he has now been banned from holding a parliamentary pass for life.

He would have been expelled if he was still an MP, the Independent Expert Panel said.

The group, which determines sanctions in cases where bullying complaints have been brought against MPs, upheld all 21 findings of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards, Kathryn Stone.

Bercow, who was Speaker from 2009 to 2019, had appealed against her conclusions after she investigated complaints by three of his staff.

But the IEP said: "The findings of the Parliamentary Commissioner, which we have upheld, show that the respondent has been a serial bully...

"His evidence in the investigations, the findings of the commissioner, and his submissions to us, show also that the respondent has been a serial liar."

JOHN BERCOW: damning indictment of the former Speaker of the House

The allegations were made by Lord Lisvane, the former clerk of the Commons, and private secretaries Kate Emms and Angus Sinclair. The panel said it has "no doubt" that they were telling the truth.

Mr Sinclair made notes about some of the incidents, including Bercow calling him "fing stupid".

On one occasion there was "spittle coming out of the mouth and arms being waved about. The anger was uncontrolled, and the complainant said he was afraid that someone might be thumped," the report said.

On another occasion involving Mr Sinclair,

Mr Bercow showed an "amazing display of temper in my office, in which he ordered me to stay seated, so he was standing over me, and then threw the mobile phone right in front of me on my desk and it burst into hundreds of bits and I could feel them hitting me.

"It was the most violent, extraordinary display of temper."

Ms Emms said: "The impacts of the one and only genuinely horrible, undermining and consistently upsetting period of my career has spread into all areas of my life".

The IEP found bullying and harassment rules were "breached repeatedly and extensively by the most senior member of the House of Commons. No person at work, however senior, indeed particularly such a senior figure, should behave in this way. This was an abuse of power."

Bercow, 59, married to former TV personality Sally, said: "The case against me would have been thrown out by any court in the land since it is based on the flimsiest of evidence, rooted in hearsay and baseless rumour...it is a travesty of justice and brings shame on the House of Commons."

Classic British foods at risk of extinction

CLASSIC British foods such as black pudding, ploughman's, pork pies and spotted dick could be lost because younger people haven't tried them.

Other out-offavor dishes at risk of extinction include saveloy and chips, bubble and squeak, and bread and butter pud.

Many of the 18 to 29-year-olds quizzed said they are turned off by the "stuffy and old-fashioned-sounding" staples. They believe the recipes are "unhealthy" and "stodgy" – and consider they have more sophisticated tastes than their parents and grandparents.

The traditional foods most at risk are jellied eels – two-thirds have not sampled them – followed by kedgeree (untried by 54 per cent) and haggis (46 per cent).

A well-done steak (42 per cent), Welsh rarebit (40 per cent), baked Alaska (39 per cent) and steak Diane (36 per cent) were next on the danger list.

The remainder of the top 20 dishes the younger generation turn their noses up at includes meaty classics like liver and onions, Lancashire hotpot, steak and kidney pudding, and gammon with a pineapple ring.

But bubble and squeak, bread and butter pudding, Arctic roll also made the list. So too did David Beckham's favourite – pie, mash and liquor.

The fortifying plate of minced beef pie with spuds and parsley sauce originated in London's East End.

The survey by supermarket supplier Sushi Daily perhaps unsurprisingly found the under-30s would prefer to eat Asian cuisine to British.

The firm said: "Old, unhealthy dishes are being replaced with healthier options like sushi and sashimi."

Prince Andrew leaves Windsor Castle after visiting the Queen on Sunday as lawyers announced he has paid sex assault accuser Virginia Giuffre to settle a US court case.

It is the first time the Duke of York, 61, has been pictured in public since agreeing last month to pay Ms Giuffre, 38, a large sum, reported to be £12million.

The Treasury confirmed no public money was used for Andrew's financial settlement or legal fees.

he came up with his own whale-themed collection of non-fungible tokens – one-of-a-kind digital artworks whose popularity has recently soared.

His first sale netted him £110,000 and his fortune rose to £750,000 in a matter of months.

His NFT collection has now traded – gone on to be sold time and again by others – for over £3.8million. He gets commission every time they are resold. Benyamin, from Pinner, Greater London, said: "Not everyone at my school fully gets it.

"But my friends know about it and they congratulate me."

Great Brits doing good for Ukraine

Things were finally start- member, Tony Preston. ing to feel like they were getting back to normal... then all hell breaks loose in UKraine.

It's truly unfathomable. My heart aches for everyone directly affected by this senseless invasion. The last couple of years have been hard for everyone, but this really emphasizes just how lucky we actually are, and makes it that much more important to get as much enjoyment and satisfaction from your daily life as you possibly can, but to also help those in need whenever you are able. This week I want to share the stories of two Brits in LA members who are doing just that.

First up is the the story of my very dear friend and longtime Brits in LA Whilst he doesn't live in LA, pre-Covid he was a very regular visitor to our fair city.

Tony is the epitome of a diamond geezer. For as long as I have known he has always stepped up to support and raise funds for those in need. Most recently he successfully helped a local group of homeless people who were pretty much being ignored by the local authorities. Tony's good deeds are usually the result of a personal connection that have either caught his eye or touched his heart. I think his compassion partially stems from the fact that he is the son of a refugee. His dad fled Hungary in 1956 under very similar circumstances to what is happening in Ukraine right now. We were introduced many years ago by our very good friend, and renowned Brit in LA, Steve Sidelnyk who is actually Ukrainian.

So it came as no surprise to me when earlier this week he told me that he and a few friends were in their local pub (The Three Mariners in Hythe, Kent, pictured, below) putting the world to rights and discussing the recent events in Ukraine. Within an hour they had secured a substantial donation, two vans, places on a ferry and a shipping company to cover paperwork. So now Tony's mission is to fill those vans with much needed supplies and drive them over to one of the Ukrainian refugee centers. They have already raised £9000 but are aiming for £12,000 although they go over their target they will add more vans or schedule multiple trips.

So if you can spare a few quid (or dollars), and want to chip in I can guarantee that with Tony and Co in charge, your money will be well spent and definitely not squandered.

Next is a bit of cheer from my 23 year-old niece, Rose Norris who is exploring the West Coast for a few weeks before she starts a new job in May working with students with special needs. Regular readers may recall that it's her first time visiting the USA and upon arrival she immediately embraced all that Los Angeles had to offer - she has been here for almost a month now, and is currently in San Francisco. I asked her to share her thoughts with us on these two very different Californian cities. Take it away, Rose:

"In all honesty, I am confused about my feelings towards both Los Angeles and San Francisco. As a born and bred Londoner, SF definitely feels more familiar. Everyone walks, including me; I am averaging over 22k+ steps a day here whereas in LA it was about a quarter of Beach, similar to LA I love how quickly you can access nature from the city. The day after, I visited Alcatraz Island, I am a bit of a history buff so really loved this, accessing the island by ferry was a great way to see the city too. It made me see that SF really is much smaller than LA. When I was in LA, I didn't enjoy the sheer size of it all but coming to SF, I almost miss that, it's quite grounding to feel like a small fish in a big pond every so often.

I have moments where San Francisco really reminds me of London. Dolores Park at sunset feels like a Saturday on a good day in Hyde Park. But then the lack of creatives living here makes it feel like a cold city, the people I have interacted with have not been as nice as I have encountered in Southern California.

unlike LA was anything I have ever experienced before. It felt so stimulating, there were so many things to do and of it all made me feel like I was on an alien planet half the time. The masses of Trader Joes there will always hold a place in my heart too. LA could definitely do with some more walkability, as a non- driver I struggled with that. LA felt like a warmer, more open city which as a young traveller I really loved. Funnily enough my fondness for LA has only properly started since I've left it.

Both cities are so so attempting to compare them is difficult. As someone who values the arts, a smile off the cashier when buying lunch and being able to see 100 different things in one day, I think I'd choose LA. Saying all this; in my eyes neither city beats London. Ha!"

US investors line up Chelsea bids an American takeover with Roman Abramovich granted his wish for a bidding war among investors.

It is believed the majority of the interest in the Blues is coming from the owners of existing US sports franchises.

'Woody' Robert Johnson, owner of the New York Jets NFL team, is among those preparing a bid, along with Vivek Ranadive, who owns the Sacramento Kings NBA team. Manhattanbased private equity firm RedBird Capital, who have a stake in CHELSEA look set Liverpool, are also in trophies since the running.

> A Swiss-American consortium headed by Hansjorg Wyss and LA Dodgers part-owner Todd Boehly have made a confirmed bid but it is unlikely to meet the asking price of £3billion-plus.

> Turkish tycoon Muhsin Bayrak also claimed last week to have made a bid for Chelsea.

> Kovacic Mateo says the World Club Cup and Champions League winners owe the Russian billionaire a huge thank you for turning them into a global power, having lifted a total of 21 his takeover in 2003.

"I am thankful for everything he gave to this club," said Croatia midfielder Kovacic.

"Chelsea is a huge, huge club thanks to him."

One player unlikely to be staying Stamford Bridge is Denmark defender Andreas Christensen, who is edging closer to a move to Barcelona in the summer.

The 25-year-old Christensen has been offered a five-year deal by the Spanish side and he could complete the formalities of his free transfer later this Ronaldo set to sit out Spurs clash?

CRISTIANO RONALDO could miss Manchester United's topfour showdown with Tottenham on Saturday to ensure he is fit for the Champions League clash with Atletico Madrid on Tuesday.

United host Tottenham at Old Trafford this weekend in a game they must win to get their top-four push back on track after last Sunday's humiliating 4-1 derby mauling at Manchester City.

Ronaldo (right) missed that defeat with a recurrence of a hip flexor problem and flew to Portugal for a minibreak to recuperate before returning on Tuesday.

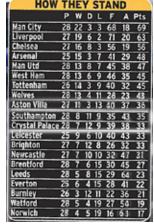

Although Ronaldo was expected to rejoin full training after being assessed by United's medical team and physio treatment.

Ronaldo is desperate to return to action for United against Spurs, but manager Ralf Rangnick is weighing up whether it is worth risking the 37-yearold forward from the start on Saturday.

United host Spanish champions Atletico Madrid on Tuesday in the decisive return leg of their Champions League last-16 tie, having drawn the first leg 1-1.
