Man charged for fatal Samurai sword rampage

IN A CASE which has horrified Londoners, a man armed with a Samurai sword killed a teenage boy and injured four others in an unprovoked attack in Hainault on Tuesday morning.

Marcus Arduini Monzo, 36, was remanded in custody at on Thursday after being charged with murdering schoolboy Daniel Anjorin with the weapon.

Westminster Magistrates' Court heard Daniel, 14, suffered fatal stab wounds and four other people were injured.

It is alleged he also hit a pedestrian with a van, attacked him, and broke into a family's home - where a couple were asleep with their young child.

The prosecutor alleged a series of "horrific offences" had been carried out.

Earlier, Daniel's family said he was a wonderful child who was "well loved" and "hard working".

"No family should have to go through what we are experiencing," they said. "Any family will understand it's an absolute tragedy."

Mr Monzo, from Newham, east London, has also been charged with two counts of attempted murder, two counts of causing grievous bodily harm, aggravated burglary, and possession of a bladed article.

The dual Spanish-Brazilian national stood in the dock in a grey tracksuit holding his left arm across his chest.

He spoke slowly to give his name and is due to appear at the Old Bailey on 7 May if a hearing is not available on Friday, the chief magistrate, Paul Goldspring, said.

All of the alleged offences are said to have happened in Laing Close, apart from the offence of GBH which is alleged to have taken place in Franklyn Gardens nearby.

The court heard Mr Monzo crashed a van into a fence at about 07:00 BST on Tuesday, hitting a member of the public.

He then got out of the van, said he would kill the man and slashed his neck with a Samurai sword, the court was told.

Prosecutor David Burns told the court Mr Monzo broke into a nearby home where a couple were asleep with their four-year-old daughter.

He allegedly went into the bedroom and attacked the child's father, shouting about believing in God and causing injuries to his neck and arm, the court heard.

Mr Monzo is accused of then running up behind Daniel, who was walking to school, and attacking him.

The court heard police officers arrived and tried to help the teenager, before Mr Monzo appeared from a bush. The officers then chased him.

The court was told that he jumped out at a female officer and attacked her with the sword while she was on the ground,

Daniel Anjorin, who suffered fatal stab wounds, had "a positive nature and gentle character" leaving her with arm wounds described by police as "horrifically serious".

He is also accused of injuring a male officer, who has a serious hand injury.

Speaking to the Press Association (PA), Aiste Dabasinskaite, Daniel's neighbour, said: "We were shouting and waving towards Daniel as he came out. He had his headphones in so he wouldn't hear us. It just happened right before our eyes, it was horrible."

Another neighbour said she could no longer sleep at night "because all I can see is him standing there with the sword".

Daniel's school, Bancroft's, in Woodford Green, said he was a "true scholar" who had a "positive nature and gentle character".

In a statement, it described him as a "core member" of the community, adding: "Losing such a young pupil is something we will always struggle to come to terms with."

A fundraising page, set up by a friend of Daniel's brother on Wednesday, has already raised £35,000.

Spooked Tories' plot to replace Sunak with Mordaunt

Angry Tory rebels have drawn up plans for a 100-day "policy blitz" to turn around the Party's fortunes and ramp up efforts to oust Rishi Sunak.

They are trying to convince colleagues to unite around Penny Mordaunt to lead the Conservatives into the general election battlefield.

A coronation for Ms Mordaunt as Prime Minister would be followed by a swathe of pledges to boost the Tories chances on polling day.

The move comes in the wake of Dan Poulter's embarrassing defection to the Labour Party just days before the local elections, cutting Mr Sunak's shrinking majority to 49.

Dr Poulter is the second person to defect to a rival party under Mr Sunak's leadership, claiming that only Labour could "cure" the NHS.

Pressure is mounting on Mr Sunak ahead of what is expected to be a bruising set of local election results on Thursday.

Rebels have drawn up a five-point plan for a potential successor in an attempt to secure "quick wins" before the election.

They include curbing legal migration, cutting the benefits bill and offering junior doctors a 10 to 12% pay rise, boost defence spending to 3% and toughening up sentencing.

A Tory rebel source said: "The country has had enough of broken pledges and distant plans for change or bans they never asked for.

"It's a plan for 100 days to show the government is taking action and cares about what matters to the British people - the NHS, immigration, getting our cont. on page 4, col. 4

Swinney set for unlikely comeback as Scotland's latest First Minister

■ Humza Yousaf steps down after losing support of Greens

John Swinney looks set to become Scotland's next first minister after Kate Forbes confirmed she would not challenge him for the SNP leadership.

Mr Swinney, the former deputy first minister and party leader, announced his intention to succeed Humza Yousaf who stepped down on Monday after losing the support of the Greens in his coalition government. Swinney also offered Ms Forbes a "significant" role in his government.

Ms Forbes later confirmed in a statement she would not stand in the contest and endorsed Mr Swinney. The former finance secretary had been the only other SNP politician to publicly state she was considering a leadership bid.

She said in a statement: "I have concluded that the best way to deliver the urgent change Scotland needs is to join with John Swinney and advocate for that reform agenda within the Scottish government.

"I can therefore today announce that I will not be seeking nomination as the next SNP leader.

"John will therefore have my support and endorsement in any campaign to follow."

Ms Forbes said she had "listened carefully" to Mr Swinney's statement and welcomed his "commitment to ensure internal respect for robust and divergent debate in the party".

She said she had held "frank and constructive" talks with the former deputy first minister.

Mr Swinney said he was "delighted" Ms Forbes had endorsed his campaign.

He said if he succeeded Mr Yousaf Ms Forbes would have a "big role" in his government - but denied a deal had been struck.

Mr Swinney, 60, announced that he was putting his name forward as he gave a speech at an event in Edinburgh on Thursday morning.

It is widely expected that he will now win the leadership unopposed.

He told supporters: "I want to build on the work of the SNP government to create a modern, diverse, dynamic Scotland that will ensure opportunity for all of her citizens.

"I want to unite the SNP and unite Scotland for independence."

The former deputy first minister, who previously led the SNP between 2000 and 2004, said the party was not as "cohesive" as it should be but he could bring it "back together".

Mr Swinney - who questioned last year whether views expressed by Ms Forbes about gay marriage made her "appropriate" to be first minister - said he wanted her to play a "significant part" in his government if he becomes first minister.

He described her as a "colleague and friend".

"She is an intelligent, creative, thoughtful person who has much to contribute to our national life," Mr Swinney said.

"And if elected, I will make sure Kate is able to make that contribution."

He told reporters he had "always believed" Ms Forbes could make a significant contribution to the government, despite his criticism during the 2023 leadership contest.

An ally of Ms Forbes added that Mr Swinney would need to offer a "big job" in the cabinet to win her support.

Former business minister Ivan McKee, a prominent backer of Ms Forbes, said she Kate Forbes narrowly lost to Humza Yousaf in 2023 understood working sense for the unity together with Mr of the party and the Swinney made "huge movement".

FULL MONTY? Panesar announced his candidacy on Wednesday

No Spin: England cricket star Panesar to stand as Workers Party candidate

Former England cricketer Monty Panesar has been unveiled as a general election candidate for George Galloway's Workers Party of Britain.

Mr Panesar said he wanted to "represent the working class people of this country" in Parliament.

He was one of dozens of Workers Party candidates unveiled by Mr Galloway in Parliament Square on Wednesday.

The Rochdale MP claimed his fledgling outfit had already selected 500 general election candidates.

And he said it was in talks with a Labour peer and three Labour MPs about switching sides, although he declined to name the potential defectors as they were not yet "nailed on".

12-year-old pair on trial for unprovoked slaying of Anguillan immigrant

Two 12-year-old boys used a machete to murder an “utterly defenceless” man, inflicting injuries to his skull and heart and slashing his legs, a court heard on Thursday.

Shawn Seesahai, 19, died in November last year after being set upon on Stowlawn playing fields in East Park, Wolverhampton.

Jurors were told that he had offered no violence and done nothing to offend either of the boys but was violently attacked.

The accused pair, who cannot be named due to their age, both deny murder.

Opening the case at Nottingham Crown Court on Thursday, Michelle Heeley KC said: “Shawn Seesahai was murdered by being struck with a machete to his back, legs and skull.

“He was also beaten and kicked. The Crown say that these two defendants were jointly responsible for that attack.”

Mr Seesahai, who lived in Handsworth, Birmingham but was originally from Anguilla in the Caribbean, had travelled to the UK to receive treatment for cataracts.

On 13 November, he had travelled to Wolverhampton with friends, while the two defendants were together on the same afternoon, meeting two girls who were about the same age, both who are witnesses in the case.

The court heard one girl told police one of the boys had regularly carried a machete and that he and other boy “were passing it between themselves” on the day of the attack.

Ms Heeley described how the boys had gone out “armed with a lethal weapon” and “had been roaming the streets” while Mr Seesahai was “just with his friends.”

Holding up the

VICTIM: Shawn Seesahai was fatally stabbed in November last year

machete, she told the court: “It’s understandable how a weapon of this type and size could cause fatal injuries in such a short space of time.”

She told the court the victim was hit so hard on the skull that a “piece of bone had actually come away.”

“He had slash wounds on his leg, and most significantly he had an injury from the machete that went through his body all the way from his back, through his ribs and into his heart.”

‘Joint attack’

After spending time walking near basketball courts, Mr Seesahai and his friend “came together” with the defendants as the boys passed the machete between them.

Ms Heeley said that according to Mr Seesahai’s friend, one of the defendants had “deliberately shoulder-brushed” the victim before pulling the knife from his trousers.

Panesar:

Luton-born Mr Panesar is aiming to overturn Labour’s Virendra Sharma 16,000 majority in Ealing Southall, in West London.

He was introduced to the crowd of Workers Party candidates and supporters in Parliament Square by a beaming Mr Galloway.

Corbyn ‘delaying’

In a brief speech, Mr Panesar said he wanted to “give something back” to the working class people who had supported him when he played cricket for England, and to “make sure the gap between rich and poor gets closer”.

Speaking afterwards to BBC News, Mr Panesar said he had never voted before but had been impressed by Workers Party policies, such as a wealth tax to boost the NHS, and had been encouraged to become a candidate by a friend.

“I was a very good spin bowler,” added the former Northants, Sussex and Essex cricketer, who was part of the side that won the 2009 Ashes series.

“This is not a spin. I expect my politics to be played with a straight bat.”

Mr Galloway, who became the Workers Party first MP in February after winning the Rochdale by-election, said Labour was his party’s “number one enemy because we seek to replace them”.

“We will have the same impact on Labour that [Nigel] Farage and the Reform party are likely to have on the Conservatives.

“We will win seats, but in potentially hundreds of seats, we will materially affect the results.”

If the prime minister decided to wait until the autumn to call an election, Mr Galloway said his party would have candidates lined up in nearly all of the 650 Parliamentary constituencies.

He said it would be campaigning hard to unseat leading Labour figures, such as deputy leader Angela Rayner and shadow foreign secretary

David Lammy.

But he also confirmed the Workers Party would not be standing against former Labour MPs Jeremy Corbyn, in Islington North, and Diane Abbott, in Hackney North and Stoke Newington, should they decide to stand as independents.

He said he did not know why Mr Corbyn was “delaying” a decision to announce that he was standing as an independent and he had “very much hoped” the former Labour leader would lead “an alliance of forces” on the left of British politics. He said he would be “delighted” if Ms Abbott joined his party but she was not among the MPs it was talking to.

Among the other Workers Party candidates, who will be expected to cover the £500 deposit for standing in a general election out of their own pocket, are former UKIP MEP Amjad Bashir, who defected to the Conservatives in 2015 and two former British ambassadors, Peter Ford and Craig Murray.

New blow for Tories as MP defects to Labour in fury at NHS crisis

A Tory MP and former health minister has staged a dramatic defection to Labour, saying the Conservatives have become a “nationalist party of the right” that has abandoned compassion and no longer prioritises the NHS.

Dr Dan Poulter, the MP for Central Suffolk and North Ipswich, who works part-time as a mental health doctor in an NHS hospital, announced he was resigning as a Tory MP and would be taking the Labour whip until the next election.

He said he would not seek re-election to the House of Commons at the next general election. But added that he envisages a role advising the Labour party on its policies on mental health while focusing more on his NHS work.

Poulter said his experiences on more than 20 night shifts over the last year in a severely overstretched accident and emergency department had been “truly life-changing” and persuaded him to defect to the only party he believed was now really committed to investing in improving the NHS.

He said: “I could not go on as part of that. I have to be able to look my NHS colleagues in the eye, my patients in the eye and my constituents in the eye. And I know that the Conservative government has been failing on the thing I care about most, which is the NHS and its patients.”

It was later revealed that discussions between Poulter and senior Labour figures have been going on for many months at the highest levels about the timing and organisation of his likely defection, as well as advisory roles he could play in future in developing the party’s health policies, with the benefit of his first-hand inside knowledge.

The defection has, however, been kept the tightest of secrets, with only half a dozen people in the party knowing it was coming before the news broke.

The Labour leader, Keir Starmer, celebrated the move on social media. “It’s fantastic to welcome Dr Dan Poulter MP to today’s changed Labour party,” he posted on X. “It’s time to end the Conservative chaos, turn the page, and get Britain’s future back. I’m really pleased that Dan has decided to join us on this journey.”

A one nation Tory on the left of the party, Poulter has regularly made his disquiet clear about the direction of government policy since David Cameron’s premiership, and it economy going by getting people back into work quickly and making our country safer and more secure.

“No more tinkering, dithering or managerialism - these are policies that can be introduced in a few months and then go to the country for people to make a decision.

“We’ve got to be clear and bold in our plan, and with the right messenger, to have any chance of winning otherwise it could be two or three terms of Labour.”

But Ms Mordaunt told Sunday Times that plotters pushing for a change in the leadership should stop “Westminster gymnastics and navel-gazing”.

And a source close to the Commons Leader said “it’s total hogwash”.

“We’ve heard these rumours time and time again. Always lacking substance. Idle speculation is not helpful to anybody but those wishing to cause chaos,” the source said.

Dan Poulter, MP for Central Suffolk and North Ipswich, has defected to Labour is understood that he has been frustrated by subsequent Tory prime ministers’ lack of interest in his views on NHS reform.

The shock defection – the first by a Tory MP to Labour since Christian Wakeford crossed the floor in 2022 – is another severe blow to Rishi Sunak before Thursday’s council and mayoral elections, in which the Tory party is expected to lose up to a half of its remaining local authority seats.

Heavy losses and failure to hold on to key mayoralties such as the West Midlands and Tees Valley are likely to reopen speculation about a possible pre-election leadership challenge to the prime minister.

In the run-up to the next general election, the future of the NHS will be a vital battleground, and Labour is known to be keen to use Poulter’s inside knowledge to maximum effect.

STABBING:

“Mr Seesahai told his friend to run and he ran,” she added, with his friend managing to escape before looking back to see Mr Seesahai on the floor.

One of the witnesses told police she saw one defendant using the machete on Mr Seesahai’s legs and saw the other defendant punching and stamping on his head.

“The prosecution say the two boys were engaged in a joint attack upon a man who had done nothing wrong, a man with no weapon, who was utterly defenceless on the ground,” Ms Heeley said.

“We say that these two boys were acting together and meant to kill Mr Seesahai, at the very least they intended to cause really serious harm.”

Phone evidence

The jury was told one of the defendants had previously pleaded guilty to possessing a machete “without good reason or lawful authority,” while the co-defendant denied the same charge.

The court also heard the boys had screenshots of knives like the one used on their phones and had searched online for news articles about the attack.

One of the boys had also searched online for “how many criminal records can you have to leave the country” a day after the murder on 14 November.

Each of the accused claim the other was responsible for the violence used.

The trial continues.

UAE takeover of Telegraph blocked

THE FUTURE of the august British publications The Daily Telegraph, The Sunday Telegraph and The Spectator was unclear this week after the government banned a takeover the titles’ publisher from a firm backed by a ruler of the United Arab Emirates.

RedBird IMI, which is part-funded by an Emirati royal, has confirmed it will withdraw from a plan to take over the newspapers as it is “no longer feasible” in light of new laws designed to stop foreign powers owning UK newspapers.

The government had blocked the investment firm from converting the debt it has secured against the Telegraph into equity by issuing a so-called public interest intervention notice (PIIN) but it has now granted a carve-out to the order to allow an “orderly transition” of the media assets to new owners.

RedBird IMI’s bid was subject to a regulatory investigation by Ofcom, the media regulator, and the Competition and Markets Authority, following the publication of the PIIN. Lucy Frazer, the culture secretary,

said the regulators had provided evidence showing the deal required a second, more in-depth analysis.

The government then introduced new legislation to block foreign governments or their affiliates from owning UK newspapers or news magazines in response to concerns about the UAE ownership of the publications.

Last year's auction for the Telegraph attracted interest from more than 20 parties but was halted after RedBird IMI made its proposed offer. There is now expected to be fierce interest from potential bidders including from Daily Mail and General Trust, and Paul Marshall, the hedge fund founder and backer of the right-wing outlet GB News. The Rupert Murdoch-owned News UK has shown interest in acquiring the Spectator.

RedBird IMI said: "Our ownership would have seen the strongest editorial protections ever put forward for a UK newspaper, along with much-needed investment.

"We continue to believe this approach would have benefited the Telegraph and Spectator's readers, their journalists and the UK media landscape more widely.

"Regrettably, it is clear this approach is no longer feasible."

Cleese: "literal-minded people" who "don't understand irony" made me cut the N-word from Fawlty revival

John Cleese said that he decided to cut the N-word from a scene in his West End Fawlty Towers revival because in contemporary Britain there are too many "literal-minded people" who "don't understand irony".

Cleese was speaking at the media launch for the West End theatrical adaptation of the classic comedy, which follows a repressed hotelier trying to control his chaotic staff. The TV show finished in 1979 after two series that are widely regarded to contain some of the best-ever British sitcom writing. The new two-hour version features scenes from three episodes of the series: The Hotel Inspector, Communication Problems, and The Germans, which originally featured a scene in which a character used racial slurs, including the N-word, while discussing a cricket match.

"Whenever you're doing comedy you're up against the literal-minded, and the literal-minded don't understand irony and if you take them seriously you get rid of a lot of comedy," Cleese said, explaining the reason for altering the script.

"They don't understand metaphor, irony or comedy exaggeration ...they're not playing with a full deck."

He also defended the overtly racist comedies of the 1970s, such as Till Death Us Do Part, which featured the character Alf Garnett, who was played by Warren Mitchell and was known for his racist outbursts.

"People were roaring with laughter at him, not with him, but there were also people saying: 'Thank God these things are being said at last,'" said Cleese.

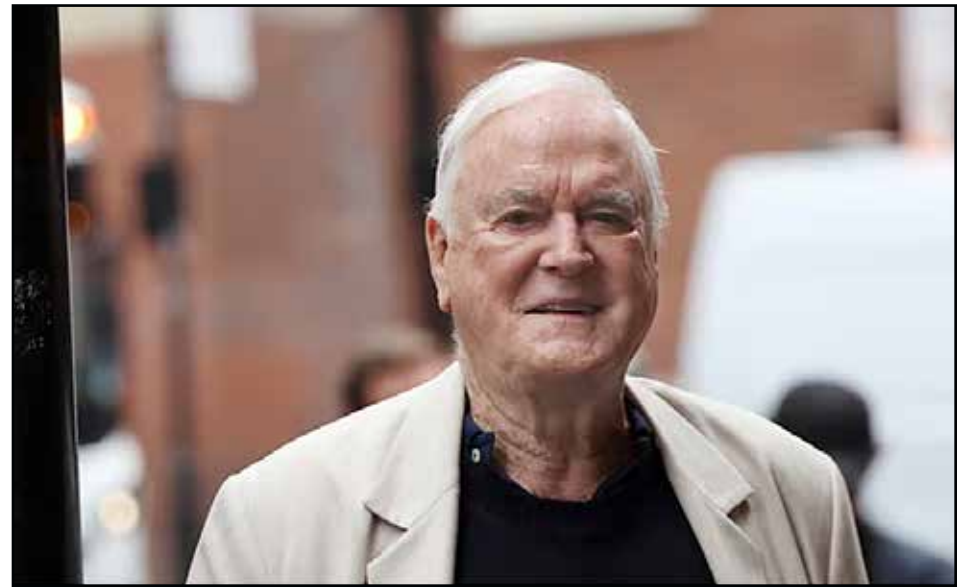

In a recent piece for the Telegraph, Cleese said that he yearned for "a return to what seemed to be a happier, friendlier, calmer, more ironic culture", while admitting that he'd considered keeping the N-word in the adaptation but decided "it's not worth the trouble".

Fawlty Towers is the latest sitcom from the 1970s, 80s and 90s to make a stage transfer. Drop the Dead Donkey, The Good Life, Some Mothers Do 'Ave 'Em, The Fast Show and Only Fools and Horses have already been adapted.

One critic said "a thirst for nostalgia and familiarity" was behind the trend, while another argued that audiences missed "big, unifying pop-cultural television events from the days before multiple channels, streaming and the diffuseness of content".

Cleese also said there had been "too much change" in British society over recent years.

"There's been too much change. Everyone is getting very anxious and people behave in a ratty sort of way and are more likely to become more literal-minded," he said. "I'm not sure what you do about it, maybe uninvent the internet?"

CLEESE: "some people don't understand irony, metaphor or comedy exaggeration"

He also believes that Britain has undergone "Americanisation" and is now too obsessed with earning money and status, while the "lower middle class" people he grew up with in Weston-super-Mare in the 1950s were more content to "do their job well ...[and] live a good life".

"One of the sad things about our culture now is that we've been infected by the American view that if you're not rich or famous you're a bit of a failure," he added.

Fawlty Towers: The Play will open on Wednesday 15 May at London's Apollo Theatre on Shaftesbury Avenue in the West End, and will run until 28 September.

Baby Reindeer: Netflix faces litigation after real-life stalker is identified

IF YOU haven't been watching Baby Reindeer on Netflix these past couple of weeks... you're missing out on the biggest streaming phenomenon of the year so far - and also the one with the most real-life controversy.

The British show recounts the creator Richard Gadd's harrowing experience of being stalked by a troubled woman, and the trouble had trying to get the police to take the matter seriously. And in a bizarre twist, internet sleuths have identified the woman in question, who is now considering legal action against the streaming giant for defamation. In an interview with the Daily Mail, she accuses Gadd of exploiting her story for fame and subjecting her to harassment.

Richard Gadd: the show's creator relives his early struggles as a stand-up comic in London

Despite Gadd's claims of disguising the character's inspiration, the woman asserts that the parallels are evident and have led to her being targeted with death threats.

Baby Reindeer was Netflix's most popular show in the most recently available viewing figures, with 87m hours of the show being watched worldwide. It was the most-watched show in the US and at press time remains in the top ten viewing list in fewer than 92 countries.

The show's debut immediately sparked a viral wave of theories about the identity of the stalker, prompting Gadd to speak out against those who were to track her

Richard and Martha's first meeting as depicted in the smash hit show down.

He claimed to have made deliberate changes to make the identities of the people portrayed on screen - including a woman who stalked him, and a man who sexually assaulted him - difficult to decipher in order to "protect" them.

"People I love, have worked with, and admire... are unfairly getting caught up in speculation," Richard wrote on his Instagram story on Monday evening. "Please don't speculate on who any of the real life people could be."

"That's not the point of our show," he added.

Before being adapted for the screen, Baby Reindeer began life as a one-man show written by and starring Richard.

Back in 2019 he told a leading British newspaper he sympathized with his real-life stalker: "I can't emphasize enough how much of a victim she is in all this. When we think of stalkers, we always think of films like Misery and Fatal Attraction, where the stalker is a monstrous figure in the night down an alleyway.

"But usually, it's a prior relationship or someone you know or a work colleague. Stalking and harassment is a form of mental illness. It would have been wrong to paint her as a monster, because she's unwell, and the system's failed her.

Gadd stars in the show as a struggling comedian who first meets called Martha (played by Jessica Gunning) in his job at a local pub. He kindly offers her a cup of tea on the house when she insists she can't afford a drink... and that's exactly how Gadd's real-life stalking ordeal started.

"At first everyone at the pub thought it was funny that I had an admirer," he told The Times. "Then she started to invade my life, following me, turning up at my gigs, waiting outside my house, sending thousands of voicemails and emails.

Richard's real-life stalker really did send him more than 40,000 emails, 740 social media posts and 350 hours' worth of voicemails over a five-year period.

Not only that, but every email you see in the show is a real message that he actually received.

The TV show depicts Donny receiving a rather dismissive response from police after finally making a report about Martha.

Donny's struggle to be taken seriously by law enforcements was also true for Richard.

REINDEER:

"I was getting told off for harassing the police about being harassed... I've been through two police investigations in my life and they've both been hilarious, fly-on-the-wall terrible," he told The Guardian in 2019.

"Honestly my advice to someone who ever thought of pressing charges would be: it's a f**g nightmare process, and it takes years."

Martha's story in Baby Reindeer ends with her getting arrested and going to court for a threatening voicemail. She's charged with stalking and harassment, and pleads guilty before receiving nine months in prison and a five-year restraining order.

However, Richard has never disclosed what actually happened to his stalker - but he has confirmed that he did get a restraining order against her.

Richard added: "It is resolved. I had mixed feelings about it - I didn't want to throw someone who was that level of mentally unwell in prison."

Richard himself is far from blameless in the affair - he is clearly very codependent in the early days of his acquaintance with Martha, dismissing her obvious mental health issues because of the validation he receives from her attention. But things quickly turn darker as the show weaves in complex themes of trauma, mental health and sexual assault. This show can be a tough watch at times - but we found it utterly compelling and you just might, too.

Blues on the up as Spurs' derby misery continues

■ 2-0 win keeps European dream alive for Poch's men

Chelsea beat Tottenham Hotspur 2-0 at Stamford Bridge Thursday night to keep them in the hunt for European football - and probably dealt a fatal blow to their London rivals' hopes of qualifying for the Champions League next season.

Trevoh Chalobah opened the scoring when the defender rose to meet a Conor Gallagher free-kick with a powerful header mid-way through the first half.

There was a lengthy video assistant referee check for a possible block by Chelsea defender Marc Cucurella on Brennan Johnson in the build-up, but the goal was given.

Spurs did not create many chances and Cristian Romero had their best opportunity when he headed wide inside the six-yard-box in the first half. But Chelsea took control in the 71st minute when Cole Palmer's free-kick from the edge of the area struck the bar and Nicolas Jackson headed the rebound into an empty net.

Victory sent Chelsea into eighth place, just two points behind Newcastle in seventh and a possible European spot.

Tottenham, meanwhile, are seven points behind Aston Villa with a game in hand in their battle for fourth place.

Their defeat means Liverpool have now clinched Champions League football in 2024-

ACTION JACKSON: Nicolas Jackson scored Chelsea's second Thursday night

25. Chelsea had only lost one of their 17 previous home games in all competitions and that defeat was back in February against Wolves.

They put in another good performance here and Jackson - a constant menace to the Spurs defence - had a great chance early on when he was played through but saw his shot half-saved by Guglielmo Vicario before Micky van de Ven then cleared off the line.

Van de Ven's clearance went straight to Palmer but he could not steer the ball in from close range.

With 14 first-team players out injured and a substitute bench packed full of youngsters

- the 21-year-old Cesare Casadei the oldest member - manager Mauricio Pochettino had to rely on his first XI to give him victory on his 400th game in English football.

Visiting Greeks demolish Villa

■ 2-4 home reverse leaves Emery's men with mounain to climb

Aston Villa face a huge task to qualify for the Europa Conference League final after a chaotic first-leg loss to Olympiakos in Thursday's semi final.

Ayoub El Kaabi scored a hat-trick for the visitors, netting twice early on.

Ollie Watkins reduced the deficit for Unai Emery's side and Moussa Diaby equalised moments after the interval.

But Olympiakos roared back in front with an El Kaabi penalty and a deflected strike from Santiago Hezze.

Douglas Luiz missed a late penalty, meaning Villa must overturn a two-goal deficit in the second leg in

Ollie Watkins scored his 27th goal for Villa this season in his team's home defeat Thursday

Piraeus on 9 May to reach their first European final since 1982.

"There were mistakes all round tonight and we'll take responsibility," captain John McGinn told TNT Sports.

"We have a mountain to climb but we know we're capable. The manager was still positive in there. There's still a long way to go."

El Kaabi began the goal flurry with a clinical finish. It was initially disallowed for an offside, but that was overturned after a check by the video assistant referee (VAR).

The Morocco striker added a classy second when he latched on to Daniel Podence's clever pass over the top and slipped the ball under Robin Olsen.

Watkins pulled a goal back for Villa in added time in the first half with an angled finish from just outside the six-yard box.
